

Mallorca is the largest island of the balearic archipelago with Ibiza, Minorca and Formentera. The name derives from Latin insula maior, "larger island". It is very well connected with the rest of Europe with its international airport.

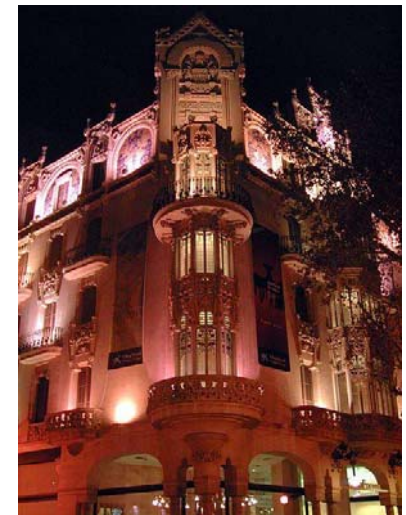

The Gran Hotel is a former historic hotel in Palma de Mallorca.

It is part of the historic centre of the city. The hotel was designed by Lluís Domènech i Montaner and completed in 1903.

Today the building has been converted into a cultural center, home to the Fundación la Caixa. It contains a permanent exhibition of paintings by Anglada Camarasa.

The building is one of the most important examples of Modern art on the island, with a facade lavishly decorated with sculptures and ceramics.

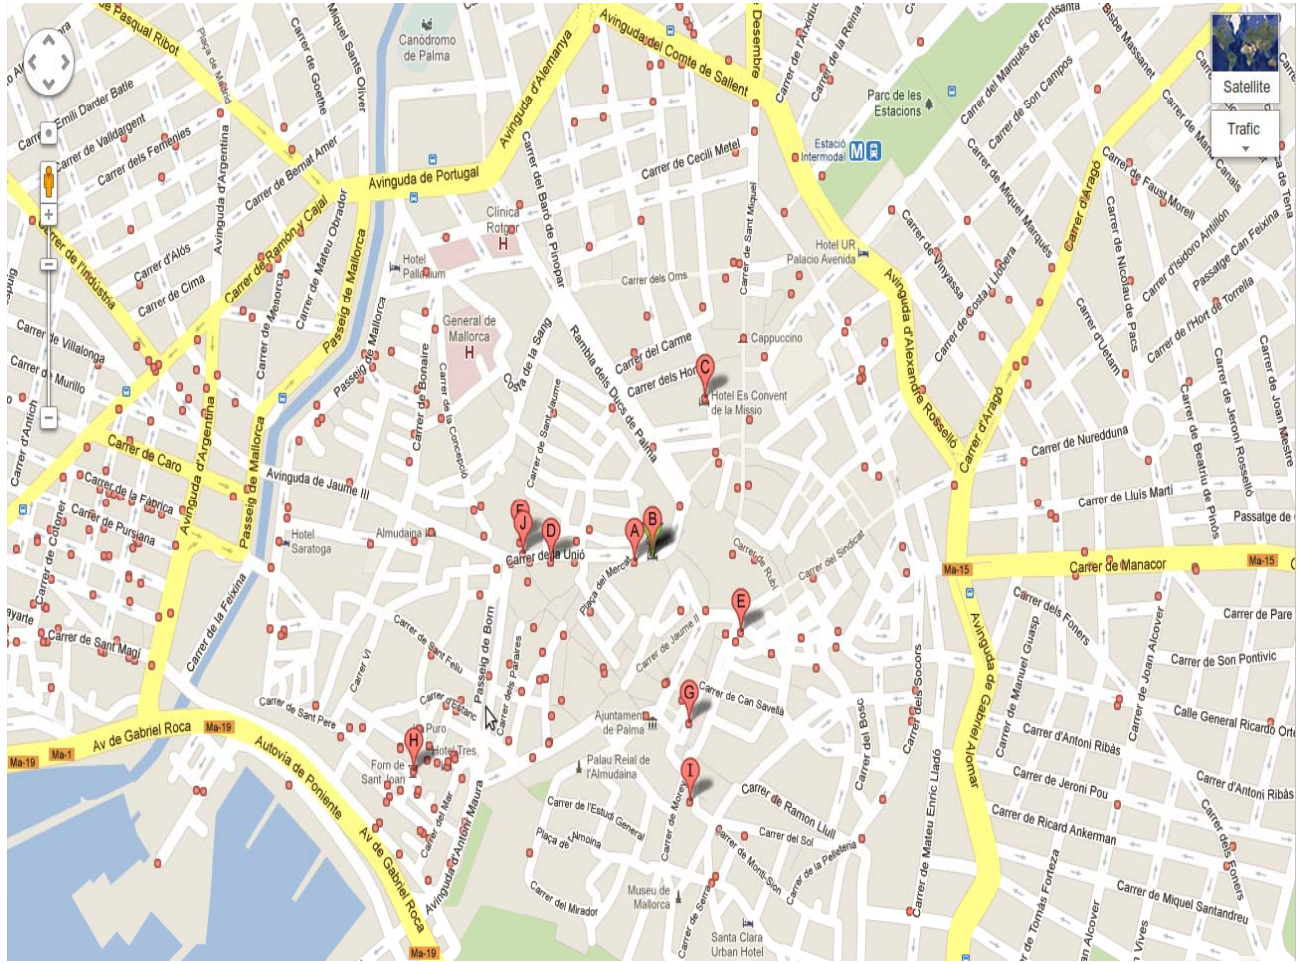

The Gran Hotel is located Plaça de Weyler, no 3 in the historic city center.
